Where I Have Walked by Abigail Roberts Jones

I walked out of an unpainted, four-room shack.
Gaily-colored pictures barely hid pine knots on the walls.
Whitened scrubbed floors creaked beneath my weight;
I looked back in humility.

I walked out from the reddened sun-baked fields of harvest,
Past the aging tired beast.
At the brook with a hollowed-out gourd -- poured a drink of
Water -- no longer thirsty.

I walked along the rutted path of the countryside;
Giant oaks shaded the way.
Green lizards scampered through the shadows
Where sand crystals yielded as I trod.

I walked beside the foaming brook,
It noticed me not.
The wildlife sharing it peacefully;
My feet cooled quickly as I dipped.

I walked beneath the droplets of June rain
-- Paces slowed by the downpour.
Soaking my remnants thoroughly,
Hands outstretched to feel the pounding rhythm as I walked.

I walked with God just this morning,
As the sun blazed upon my brow, perspiration blinding.
No voices! No laughter! Shrills free from the city's Streets.

I walked at peace -- with God.
